NO VINYL: BLACKLUSTER

This year's twenty-fifth birthday of the Motown record label (complete with smarmy network TV special) brings a thought-parade waltzing through this white boy's head about the current state of black pop music. After a decade in the dumpster, black pop seems to be finding itself again—and true to form, caucasian chrome-domes, such as myself, are busy telling you why.

If the early sixties incursion into (white) mainstream pop awareness by Motown's A-Team represented a renaissance of black American music—the refinement of the vicereally involving, melodically inventive, concise pop statement—then the seventies, armed with glossy, meaningless dance music, was a slick seducer into a new Dark Age. (No pun, asshole.)

With only a couple of exceptions (holdovers from the renaissance, mostly), black pop lost much of its white audience in the seventies—and not without good reason. Diverted into narcissism, show-biz superficiality, and tedious cliché by billions of beckoning bucks, most of the stuff simply sucked. A John Waters nightmare image of the era endures: a line of snappily-attired smiling oroes (with names like "The Canaries," or "Leroy Melvin and the Limp Nudes"), all dancing and hand-jiving in unison, singing some stupid horseshit about "getting down." Pathetic. Only a paltry handful—LaBelle, Chic, the Jacksons, Parliament / Funkadelic—seemed interested in preserving whatever vitality remained in the black mainstream, though even these guys restricted themselves to a narrow emotional spectrum, and remained fundamentally escapist. (A good portion of the late-seventies rock vs. disco antagonism can also be ascribed to shallow-grave racism triggered by cultural symbolism implicit in the music.)

Some of that audience polarization finally seems to be drifting back toward healthy integration, thanks to a Cadillac-load of great records from black artists. More than just convincing honkies to slap record store clerks with five (hell, eight—this is 1983), a number of new black vinyl products have also done their bit for cross-cultural insinuation and smashing the barriers of genre chauvinism (more symbolic racism—like MTV). It should be pointed out, though, that once again (as in the sixties blues boom more recently) it's taken foreigners to show us whiteys the value of our homegrown music. While the obvious preference white audiences have for black music xeroxed by cute English boys—rather than the stuff from those unruly ruffians who play their tombstone-sized radios loudly in the streets—might be disturbing, it has at least lubricated the way in for the music's originators. Personally, I think George Clinton's much cuter than Boy George, but that's another story.

Most visible on the barricades of commerce recently has been Michael Jackson, propelled by the godzilla success of his Thriller LP (Epic). Not only have Jackson's slick videos trashed MTV's genre/color line (the West Side Story-ish "Beat It," and the "Billie"—designer—Jean" commercial), but he's also set racism back twenty-five years by inviting three ofay eminences to lend a pink hand on his record (Eddie Van Halen to beat his ax for cowardice on "Beat It," Vincent Price to ham it up hilariously on the title-cut rap, and an embarrassing bit of Paul-and-Pauling with McCartney on "The Girl Is Mine"). And Jackson has singlehandedly booted dancing forward a good century or two—whew! That boy's pelvis must've been designed by NASA engineers! But, the question is, is the record any good? Well, I liked four of the nine songs, which points up black pop's longstanding embrace of the single at the expense of the album, and also Lou's enduring blind spot for squishy ballads (Gag me with a string section!). The four, however, are superlative examples of the state-of-the-art single-making: sensually exhilarating, produced (by Quincy Jones, the Walt Disney of the recording studio) with impeccable style and textural richness, and even some exposure of Mikey's own viewpoint on growing up in public. A stunning piece of work.

Prince is the only other human in the world who dances in the same league with Jackson (someday the two of them might be as good as James Brown). As he proved at a sold-out Radio City show in NYC, recently, Prince is a man in full control of his body, his band, his music, his image, and his audience. Ignoring, for the moment, the suspicions aroused by anyone who aspires to that sort of control, I can at least appreciate the appearance of a thinking human being at work—though far too often, Prince thinks with his balls. Until 1999 (Warner Bros.)—his fifth LP (not bad for a twenty-three year old)—I just couldn't stand the schmuck. His music was pregnant with clichés, engorged with neurotic self-obsession, and tumescent with his humorless invocation of the black-macho-stud, fll-fuck-you-till-you-gargle-in-my-cum stereotype. Offensive to say the least. With 1999, Prince-of-whales' shlong-workshop recedes into a shared pantheon with mush-minded utopianism (absurdly hailed by caucasian critics everywhere—if Prince's lyrics had come from the mouth of a long-haired white boy, I'm sure the same clowns would hoot and sneer . . . adolescent gibberish remains such regardless of source). Despite excessive wrongthink, Prince's craftsmanship (both in song architecture and studio etiquette—he does everything himself) is exemplary, and 1999 is (excuse the expression) one fuck of a dance/party record, and his live show, a charismatic tour de force. Princely spin-offs the Time (What Time Is It?, Warner), and Vanity 6 (Vanity 6, Warner) are much less successful, applying burlesque (ha-ha for the former, lingerie for the latter) to ease the chafing of skin-deep funk.

From the Prince, we elevate to the King: George Clinton, late of the one-for-all Parliament/Funkadelic domain, now of the all-for-one solo career (Computer Games, Capitol). Clinton's inspired marriage of (James) Brownian motion with Richard Pryor foolishness (had the latter inhaled nitrous oxide instead of free-based coke) has always been refreshingly insane—a lone beacon of lunacy amidst the straight-assed conservatism of most funk music. And Computer Games measures up to the countless Clinton-masterminded records of the last decade, even down to the proportions of multi-layered hysteria (twenty minutes) to lukewarm leftovers (ten minutes). Clinton's stopover in New York (at the Red Parrot) was nothing short of exultant, with the audience (nearly outnumbered by the troops on stage) totally losing their minds. The stage dynamics were fascinating to watch; the personnel shifted constantly during the two-and-a-half hour show. Clinton appearing like a benign deity to bless the proceedings, lead a chant, and sing a bit, then floating offstage. Bootsy Collins even made an appearance to lead the crowd through "Body Slam," which definitely made my evening. The whole tribal ritual atmosphre reminded me of shows by Sun Ra and King Sunny Ade; all three men exhibit a calm, confident leadership of their groups, the mutual love and respect evident on everyone's face. Woof woof!

My main gripe with funk these days is that there are still far too few people willing to take risks. It's almost uniformly complacent, formulaic music, and most everyone doing it seems happy to have it that way. Well, Lou's not happy, guys . . .

—Lou Stathis

GAYE LIBERATION

One may wonder why Marvin Gaye's career has been such an elusive affair, as this smoothie moves in and out of the public eye with seeming disregard for commercial consequences. Truth is, Marvin had been the odd-man-out at Motown for a long time, and it was only recently that he was able to terminate his contract there and begin again. While Smokey Robinson and label chief Berry Gordy remained tight as a drum, Gaye fell into disfavor over ten years ago when he was held responsible by Gordy for the untimely demise of Tammi Terrell. At this point in time, Motown gave Marvin the go-ahead to record an album of mostly self-produced original songs—a first for this tightly-held company—assuming that he'd produce self-indulgent, non-commercial fare that would serve to end his career.

The result, What's Goin' On, spelled the death of Motown as a musical factory-line, proving that artists can go out on a limb, maintain their integrity, and still have chart success. This went over none too well with Gordy, nor did Gaye's marriage to his daughter—it was looking too much like Marvin was holding all the cards. Try as they would to bury him, the music was too strong to go unrecognized (the details of this were fictionalized into a novel, Number One With a Bullet, by a former Motown staffer).

Marvin Gaye: just what the doctor ordered.

So we all know that Marvin divorced Motown and his former beloved, moved to Europe, and instantly produced one of the biggest crossover r&b hits of all time, "Sexual Healing" (Columbia). But this is just the tip of the iceberg-to-be, as Marvin's new residence promises even more advanced musical adventures, and his latest claim is that the follow-up is "at least three times as controversial" as his recent hit. Truly this cat has at least three lives—one shouldn't be surprised by anything he produces.

EXTRA- TERRA-RAP

I've been to other planets," insists Afrika Bambaataa. "Like Saturn, it's really swingin'—they dance on circle rings with tilted floors."

Bambaataa could know all about it: he sells just as many records outside the asteroid belt as he does here on Earth. And for the same simple reason: he and his Soul Sonic Force rappers make sounds that take their listeners to blissful new worlds of music and dance.

"Funk with electronics" is how Bambaataa describes the music he and Soul Sonic make with producers Arthur Baker and John Robie. "Planet Rock" and "Looking for the Perfect Beat" (Tommy Boy) are the first dance records to merge the street rhythms of rap with the multi-hued sounds and textures of synthesizers.

"Perfect Beat" is an especially wondrous record—a virtual rap symphony, with seamlessly flowing and changing rhythmic patterns and recurring vocal hooks. It recreates a crowded day on the street or in an interstellar subway car, its synth-splashes layered like noisy graffiti. And like its predecessor "Planet Rock," "Perfect Beat" contains a utopian, one-world message: "In this world of music, there are many different tones. . . ."

This message of hope, written by Soul Sonic MC GLOBE (with contributions from other members Mr. Biggs, Pow Wow, and Jazzy Jay), is chanted in an original form of rapping known as MC poppin'. As opposed to the gritty, on-the-beat, story-telling style of the Furious Five's Melle Mel, Soul Sonic's rap language leaves narrative behind, replacing it with a word and sound collage. In their repetition and variation, the words suggest religious incantations and trances. The message is religious, too; by "looking, searching, seeking, finding," you come across your own perfect beat, your own destiny or true path. It's a vision that can turn a dance of doom into a shout for joy.

Bambaataa (who keeps his given name and age a secret) has been trying to turn death into life for more than ten years now. Growing up during the mid-seventies, a vicious era of street-gang violence in the Bronx, Bambaataa quickly saw through that way of life and became a local peacemaker and diplomat instead. And the tool of his trade was the turntable.

One of the first great D.J.s on the scene that would eventually be called hip-hop or rap, Bambaataa, "master of records," brought what was left of the warring gangs together into a peace-loving mega-tribe known as the Zulu Nation (the name Bambaataa is Zulu for "affectionate leader").

A vast consortium of D.J.s, rappers, break dancers, and graffiti artists, the Zulu Nation is like a multi-media Motown, featuring the Soul Sonic Force, the Cosmic Force, the Rock Steady Crew, and many, many others. Bambaataa's role is a cross between the Buddha and George Clinton—his ideas permeate the sounds, even if he does not always write, compose, or play on the records.

Already the shaggy, bass synth-driven beat of Bambaataa is widely imitated, most shamelessly by Englishmen like Malcolm McLaren and now New Order, who've at least gone to the source and recorded with Arthur Baker.

"A lot of people don't understand where we're comin' from," says Bambaataa, "and we like it that way. By 1999, we'll be on Mars—or in Cleveland. Wherever the government people are, we're gonna be watching them. 'Cause we are the future and they are the past."

STYLISHLY WILD

They call it the "hip-hop" culture—the South Bronx triple threat of graffiti art, rap/DJing, and break dancing—and it's made an indelible imprint upon New York's pop life and modern art scene. Last summer, America took the rap and got "The Message." Now, thanks to British and German TV, the New York State Council on the Arts, and filmmaker Charlie Ahearn, there's Wild Style, a cinematic showcase for the exuberant teenage street arts that comprise the upbeat flipside of ghetto life.

Ahearn's fascination with street culture surfaced in

"For a year and a half I was the only white person that they or I ever saw...."

1976, when he put down his paint brush and began work on The Deadly Art of Survival, a martial arts super-8 which "enjoyed a reputation for being a tough street film." Survival attracted the interest of graffiti-writer Fred Brathwaite, who exhibited in the groundbreaking Ahearn-curated Times Square art show in 1980, and introduced the filmmaker to the emerging scene.

"The first rap scene I got involved with was in June 1980, in this park up in the Bronx," Ahearn recalls. "Maybe five hundred teenagers were in this pitch black park, and we entered onto this tiny stage from the side. The first person I met was Chief Rocker Busy Bee, and I told him I was interested in doing a film, and he introduced me to this huge crowd of people. This is my producer, he's making a movie about me with rap music. This was the first time I'd ever been to a rap thing—we didn't even know where the fuck we were. The word traveled fast; soon, I was getting people coming up to me and telling me about their act. For a year and a half hanging out in clubs I was the only white person that they or I ever saw, so it was pretty hard to slip by unnoticed."

Wild Style, which opened the Museum of Modern Art's New Directors/New Films series, begins with a colorful burst of animated graffiti (designed by "white boy graffiti artist" ZEPHYR, who portrays ZROC), and then leads us through train yards, rap clubs, playgrounds, and urban streets. We follow the adventures of outlaw graffiti writer ZORO as he attempts to maintain his secret identity and artistic integrity in the face of sudden publicity from downtown hipsters and competition from a rival graffiti gang led by his ex-girlfriend. The acting ranges from self-conscious first-time dramatics to the glorious hammy of underground regulars like Patti Astor and Bill Rice, but the weaker narrative moments never detract from the astounding performance footage (e.g. lingering closeups of Grandmaster Flash's hands whizzing between two turntables). Ahearn's stars are at their best doing what comes naturally—boasting in distinctive street patois, rapping, dancing, painting, and just plain goofing.

The music—directed by Brathwaite (who offers a comic turn as "prince promoter" PHADE) with original tunes by the man who immortalized him as Fab Five Freddy in "Rapture," Blondie's Chris Stein—and the deft camera-work and editing captures the scene's color and energy with a graceful economy that helps to make sense out of a vibrant new sensibility.

"Wild style," Ahearn explains, is a descriptive term applied to "disjointed, muscular, animated" graffiti lettering and shares a common aesthetic with break dancing and DJing. "There's a quality called 'bugged-out.' Like they might look at a cover of Heavy Metal and say, 'that's bugged-out man,' which means that it's done with a style that they may not understand, but it makes sense, and it's really cool."

Luckily, Ahearn manages to portray the sometimes bugged-out antics of the scene without resorting to a cinematic "wild style" that might easily overwhelm an uninitiated audience. As writer/director/producer he achieves an insightful look at a unique society, avoiding the pitfalls of trendy sensationalism and/or academic documentation. Instead, Wild Style succeeds by using a wholly appropriate biographical narrative: "The people we see in this film are the real people who created this culture. Lee (ZORO) has a reputation so extensive that when I'd mention his name to some eight-year-old in the Bronx, they'd stare up at me like I was talking about Picasso."

"I have practiced graffiti," he admits, "and I can say without a doubt that it's the

"A lot of people see graffiti as making the place more beautiful."

AMERICAN GRAFFITI

Although artist Keith Haring is a relatively recent arrival in New York (he grew up in Kutztown, Pennsylvania, a small town near Philadelphia), he has quickly come to epitomize the self-determined NYC artist—a stereotype which combines an aggressive personality with the single-minded objective of making it at all costs. So it was something of a surprise to find that this young man who has managed to dominate the NYC art scene with such apparent ease, was shy, almost timid, and childlike. Despite the phenomenon currently surrounding him, Haring has maintained a genuine and surprisingly untainted, country-boy personality. Perhaps it's this aspect of his background that gives him the distance from the streets necessary to gain insight into what emerges from them.

After a short unhappy stay at a Pittsburgh art school, Haring moved to New York in 1978 and enrolled at the School of Visual Arts. His stay there was short as well, and soon his white-on-black chalk drawings began appearing on walls throughout the city (both over and underground). His progression from public walls to gallery walls was amazingly swift, to where Haring is now—at twenty-four—one of the most commercially successful new artists on the scene. His instant popularity is due perhaps to his simple, graphic approach, most fun you can have in New York. It's childhood fantasies like hide and seek, and cops and robbers with a real element of danger: "But," he adds respectfully, "the real writers consider it a sacred act and think of their work as talismans, and when a piece rides through the city, that's them, that's their soul riding on that train."

—David Keeps

and images that impact the viewer with the immediacy of good advertising art.

While drawing his primary inspiration from subway and building-wall graffiti, Haring's stylistic sources encompass all the visual matter of street-born pop culture: sf and fantasy movies, comics, newspapers, magazines, rock'n'roll, etc. He utilizes an almost generic form of cross-cultural hieroglyphics to ruminate on subjects both metaphysical and political—re-occurring images include radiating babies, dogs, TVs, exploding bombs, and atomic symbols.

Though Haring's canvas works now command four and five figure prices in prestigious galleries, his style remains essentially unchanged—except for the new works' monumental size (size is apparently proportional to significance in the contemporary art world). It's important to note that while Haring has been accepted by the art establishment both here and in Europe, he has continued doing his street and subway pieces, and maintained a strong link with his origins. While some have characterized him as nothing more than a shrewd art-market strategist with a good gimmick, Haring firmly insists that his primary motivation was to execute his drawings in places where they would become part of the real world, and at the same time be accessible to large numbers of people.

—Amy Lipton

HM: Your work is very "New York." Would you say it's influenced by living here, or would you be doing the same thing somewhere else?

KH: Probably not. There are things I'm doing now that translate to any place I go, but I don't think it would have happened if I weren't here. I was recently in Rotterdam, and I did drawings there on the street with chalk, and it made me realize that I could really go anywhere in the world and do these drawings, and it would mean something to someone. It didn't depend on the language.

HM: Any type of viewer will do?

KH: Right, but even while I was there I wanted to get back and do it in New York—there's just something about doing it here. When I'm here I have to do it. Every time I ride the subway I understand why I do the drawings here.

HM: Would you say politics are involved?

KH: I would say hopefully—but it's a different idea of politics. It's not overtly political in the way that propaganda literally spells out what it wants you to think. I think it operates more subtly. I mean, in some ways graffiti itself is political, because it's a subversive or disobedient act. But it's not the same as writing a slogan on a bank, it's a different kind of politics. I don't want to use things so overtly political that it would become a barrier—lots of times things that are political turn people off, so they don't become a part of it, or get the message at all. It's like, "Oh that again, I don't want to hear about it." I think the way people operate or function in the world is just as "political" as anything else.

HM: So your motivation is different than the usual graffiti writer in that you're not just putting up something that says, "this is me," or naming that place with your mark?

KH: Yes, I think that—but people in graffiti aspire to different things. Some graffitiers just tag their name, claiming that thing, and it might not go beyond that. But a lot of them are interested in making things look better, putting it there so a lot of people will see it, having it become part of the place that you put it in, adding some kind of human element. A lot of people see it as making the place more beautiful. Doing whole sides of trains, making these incredible things with bright colors—if you see a train come out of a tunnel, it's an art experience, a moving experience, to see something beautiful being made.

HM: Do you align yourself with graffiti artists?

KH: I always tried to. I don't think I fit into the same category necessarily, but I respect graffiti to the extent that I was here for two years before I felt I had something to contribute in the street. There are lots of people doing it, though, that have no respect for what's already there. Most graffiti writers understand things about writing on the streets that many people overlook—there's really a code of ethics, an unwritten code that the artists know or feel. That's why, after I started, it was really rewarding to be accepted by other graffiti artists as someone whose motivation came from the same kind of place.

HM: How did you discover that?

KH: Well, I began meeting graffiti writers after people started connecting me with the work I was doing. Plus I like a lot of graffiti myself, so I've tried to meet some of the people doing it. There's one guy who writes LA2, which stands for Little Angel. I saw his tag on the street, and I noticed there was something different about it—partly because of where he put it, and partly because of how he could draw. So I asked around about who he was, and about a month later we met. We got along really well—we had a lot of things in common about the way we drew, what we drew, and why. And one night in my studio it just happened that I had an empty panel, and he started drawing on it. We've done several pieces together, sold them, and split the money.

HM: How did you start drawing in the subway?

KH: I started drawing in the subway because it was just another place to draw—the whole time I was also drawing on pieces of wood, paper, things like that. Drawing in the subway changes the way the work enters the real world. It's immediately on view, immediately becomes part of the real world. That was something I wanted—it comes from what I thought of as my responsibilities as an artist in the Eighties.

It all seemed really natural when it happened. About two years ago I started doing these drawings that had recognizable images—images that could be read by any person, no matter what kind of background. As an image, and not a word, it had innumerable possibilities—you don't have to know any other information other than what you see to understand it as an image, as a drawing. Soon after I started drawing these images I started drawing in the street, and one day I saw a subway panel (Where advertising posters are placed—ed) that was empty, and it just kinda seemed so obvious. Like, it's empty and all you'd need is some chalk and you could just draw on it. So, after I did one there was no stopping, it just took off.

HM: How do you feel about the transference from subway to gallery? Has it changed you in any way?

KH: Everything changes, but I think it depends. I approach doing a piece on the subway with the same amount of care and concentration that I give a piece that's going to be sold for $10,000. No matter where I draw it's just as important, whether I'm doing it on the sidewalk and it's going to last ten minutes, or if it's a big piece that's going to hang in some rich person's house. I don't place any more importance on a thing just because someone is going to buy it.

In the beginning I didn't want to work on canvas, because it already has this value attached to it. And I thought the most important thing is doing the drawing—it didn't matter what was going to happen to the drawing after you did it, or how long it was going to last, or if it was going to be worth anything. In some ways this whole gallery system, becoming part of it, eats that up—but I think it's still possible, if you have any kind of personal integrity at all, for it not to be a bad thing. It should be something you can use as much as it uses you, or use more than it uses you.

HM: How do you think it will affect you in the long run?

KH: In the long run it'll probably kill me. But what else is there?

HM: If it starts to overwhelm you, or you lose control of it, you can change to doing something completely different.

KH: I'm not scared of stopping it. If I thought I was starting to repeat things or becoming a commodity, I would just stop doing it—I'm not into making things for other people to make money from. But, if I refuse to make things to sell to people, then what am I going to do with them? Then I won't make things. In some ways it's good to make things that are going to be around awhile—whether money has to change hands for it to happen or not—in case—

HM: In case we're not?

KH: Yes, whatever. But at the same time I want to keep drawing in the subway. I want to keep doing things to give away, and keep having the relationship I have with people in the street, because one of the strongest things for me right now is the kind of real place my art has in the world—just because of how many people know about it from seeing it, and have encouraged me from seeing me while I'm drawing. These are not people concerned with "art"—stuff confined to this little place that's for intellectuals to understand and write about and fight over and buy and sell—because that's not what it's about. I mean, with the world in the situation it's in now, some things become most important—things human beings can do, human accomplishments. If there's any beauty about being alive or being human, that's where those things lie.

THE BLUES AND THE NEWS

For those who have that incessant need to make what New York Times lead music critic John Rockwell calls "a non-verbal art" just a tiny bit verbose, here are two newish books on the roots and current state of American music: The Illustrated Encyclopedia of Black Music (Harmony), and Rockwell's own All American Music (Knopf).

"At best, a verbal gift provides a lively adjunct to musical talent," writes Rockwell, not in an attempt to justify his book centering on late twentieth century American composers. But a lively adjunct it turns out to be, particularly for those unfamiliar with the turns and twists "serious" American music has lately taken. We Yanks have typically looked to Europe and Asia for "high" culture, usually demeaning what musics are our own: jazz, blues, funk, rock, experimental, environmental, electronic, Broadway. The new composers—Cage, Ashley, Glass, Laurie Anderson, the Art Ensemble of Chicago, Ornette Coleman, Sonheilm, Talking Heads (among others)—have elevated their so-called secular forms to art, and brought so-called high art back to music, and to the people. Most of Rockwell's serious composers are also viable commercial entities, and the possibility of that is certainly a new development.

All American Music documents the hows and whys of this phenomenon without the judgemental eye exhibited in Rockwell's often caustic criticism. He presents the material in the manner of a cultural historian, and has purposefully gone for the vernacular and a somewhat jumbled subjective structure. Chapters supposedly about particular composers often veer off onto others (just about everybody's name, from film scorers to SoHo's art-rock crowd, gets dropped—excepting, inexplicably, Captain Beefheart), but this makes for a lighter, more conversational read than one might expect. Rockwell traces the roots of cultural trends—music being an area particularly packed full of 'em—and illustrates that American music is now elevated to major metaphor status, clearly a key to the American mind.

Everything you ever wanted to know (but were too embarrassed to ask your all-trivia-knowing friends) about soul, r&b, blues, disco, jazz, and funk is what's in The Illustrated Encyclopedia of Black Music. This is the fourth in a series of Harmony musical encyclopedias, and while it may only be must-read for rock crits, DJs, and otherwise fanatics, it documents a huge slice of American pie not often taken seriously as "Kultur." Unlike the encyclopedias you copied from in grade school, it's very readable, fun even (with beaucoup trade gossip, like why Tammi Terrell died so young), and has more than 250 color mini-record sleeves, and over 300 color in-concert photos of the famous, the gorgeous, and the now-obscure. Everybody from Chuck to Smokey to Diana to Marvin to Jimi to Prince to several assorted rappers are here. Point for point, this behemoth effort illustrates how influence built upon influence; how soul, disco, jazz, and r&b grew up to become very adult major American musical forms. Not to mention British ones.

NAHALLYWOOD

Alan Arkush on the set of Get Crazy with the Nada band. (Lori Eastside, far right)

It's A Night at the Opera at a rock concert," says director Allan Arkush of his newest off-the-wall venture, Get Crazy. "I'd call it bits of Animal House mixed in with twenty-four hours at a concert hall but with very traditional old musical-comedy values.... I think."

One of the few movies around that lives up to its name, Get Crazy is set both onstage and behind-the-scenes at a New Year's Eve show celebrating a rock palace's 15th anniversary. Heavy metal butts heads with new wave and r&b bawdiness as an array of decidedly unique characters parade before the camera. Among the most infamous: heavy metal icon Reggie Wanker (Malcolm McDowell), wild rocker Piggy (Lee Ving of Fear), Mark and Marv (Bobby Sherman and Fabian), songwriter Audin (Lou Reed), and acid casualty Captain Cloud (The Turtles' Howard Kaylan).

If Get Crazy sounds like an atypical sort of film, suffice to say that Allan Arkush is an atypical sort of director. A graduate of the Roger Corman school of cut-rate filmmaking ("You learned to think on your feet!"), he's best known for the Ramones vs. higher education cult classic Rock'n'Roll High School ("A combination of The Bandwagon, A Hard Day's Night and Todd Browning's Freaks.") and the out-of-whack robot romance Heartbeeps ("No commercial elements whatsoever.") starring Andy Kaufman.

"I really don't go out of my way to make weird movies," smiles the 35-year-old filmmaker who doesn't look overtly nuts. "They just happen. Get Crazy happened because I always wanted to do a movie about my experiences working at the Fillmore East. Some pretty wild things happened there and I thought they'd make a good screenplay."

"But the rock concert scene changed radically during the 1970s. The groups became the drawing factor and not the concert hall. Audiences became more conservative—they'd only pay attention to the group they came to see."

"I thought it would be nice to do a film about how concerts were. No one was interested. So, figuring that I'm just as interested in music now as I was then, I updated the story. The first company who saw the new version loved it."

Arkush gathered financing, had a script written and set about putting his ultimate rock concert/comedy together. It wasn't a lot of laughs.

"Originally, we wanted real musicians to play our musician characters. For instance, we envisioned Wanker as a larger-than-life star along the lines of Jagger, Robert Plant, and Rod Stewart. We went through a list of all the big rockers and no one wanted to touch the role—too close to home."

"At that point, we considered actors. Our first choice for Wanker was Malcolm. I thought he was a riot in A Clockwork Orange. He read the script and said he'd do the film if he could sing all his own songs. Although I had only heard him perform 'Singin' in the Rain,' I figured 'why not?' As it turns out, Malcolm wanted to be a rock star once. Did a demo and everything."

"Wanker is sort of an overgrown adolescent. His whole plot revolves around that. Heavy metal, after all, is the dominant musical form for adolescent males. There's a macho trip attached to it. In the movie, Malcolm really gets into things on stage. He has a ball."

With a star committed, Arkush lined up such additional cast members as Daniel Stern, Allen Goorwitz (née Garfield), Miles Chapin, Ed Begley, Jr., Paul Bartel, Mary Woronov, and ex-Coconut Lori Eastside as well as some surprises.

"We have a lot of musicians from the Los Angeles area on stage. We have the guys from Fear. Lou Reed plays a singer who hasn't been seen for six years. Our new wave band is called Nada; ten girls and one guy,

The guy is kept on a chain. That's Lee Ving. John Densmore (of The Doors) plays Malcolm's drummer."

"The biggest challenge I faced," laughs Arkush, "wasn't keeping the people in line, but keeping them up. We filmed in a real theater and it was seven weeks of New Year's Eve every day. How do you keep people psyched up for that amount of time? My direction usually consisted of saying 'Now do it again, only faster.'"

"I was really trying to make a movie that had all the energy of a rock'n'roll song. I didn't want some Hollywood laid-back film. Most rock movies don't have the energy of the music. When the music is on the screen, things are fine. When the music stops, the movie goes into the toilet."

"I think that's because most of the people making these movies aren't familiar with the music. They've never been into it. I perceive the music and the lifestyle as the same. Tempo. Tempo. Faster. Faster."

"Our plot is pretty simple but the movie was shot in a breakneck style. It's the kind of film you leave thinking, 'Boy! I'd better see this again 'cause there's a lot I missed.'"

Despite the variety of musical styles (and lifestyles) represented in the movie, and the presence of some of the grungiest extras seen since Beneath the Planet of the Apes, Arkush swears that the making of Get Crazy was anything but.

"Everyone got along really well. No one spat on each other or anything. Malcolm helped a lot of the more inexperienced actors rehearse and Howard Kaylan—who plays a hippy who shows up fifteen years late for a concert—was always funny."

Arkush drifts off into a monologue peppered with plans for Get Crazy's soundtrack album ("We have 19 songs in this movie and they're all played LOUD!"), his reaction to the concert scenes ("I felt less culture shock this time out than in Rock'n Roll High School!") and his efforts at launching his next film ("I think we're going to call it Maui Wowie").

With visions of new wavers, heavy metal welders, and assorted rock refuse dancing in his head, Arkush attempts to sum up Get Crazy in terms sociologically significant enough to satisfy the millions of serious film addicts out there in America (You know, the people who can read Film Comment without laughing.)

He clears his throat and announces: "This is the rock 'n' roll movie that finally answers the burning question of our time—what do the purple haired and mohawked punks do during the daylight hours? They act in my films!"

Arkush smiles the smile of a man who doesn't look overtly nuts, but....

XEVIOUS VIDEO GAME ENGINEERED AND MANUFACTURED BY NAMCO, LTD. MANUFACTURED UNDER LICENSE BY ATARI, INC. TRADEMARK AND ©NAMCO 1982. VIDEO GAME REVIEW ©1983, BY JOHN HOLMSTROM

VIDEO GAMES CAN BE UNIQUE STORYTELLING DEVICES. XEVIOUS TELLS A SIMPLE TALE OF PLANETARY DESTRUCTION AND GLOBAL MAYHEM. YOUR SPACESHIP, THE SOLVALOU, FIGHTS AN INTENSE BATTLE AGAINST AN ALIEN PLANET. AS IT TRAVELS ACROSS THE SURFACE, FOURTEEN DIFFERENT KINDS OF SPACESHIPS ATTACK AT VARIOUS TIMES, WHILE ELEVEN DIFFERENT LAND BASES AND GROUND VEHICLES EITHER FIRE AT YOU OR SIT THERE, RIPE TARGETS FOR DEATH. THEY BLOW UP IN A FIERY EXPLOSION AND LEAVE SMOLDERING CRATERS BEHIND THAT RESEMBLE GLOWING SCABS ON THE FACE OF THE LANDSCAPE. THE AIR TARGETS BURST INTO TINY FRAGMENTS AS IF THEY'RE MADE OF FINE CHINA. THERE ARE ALSO UNDERGROUND LAND BASES AND SUBMARINES THAT ARE INVISIBLE TO THE NAKED EYE. TO FIND THEM, WATCH THE "BLASTER" CROSSHAIRS. THEY TURN RED WHEN THEY'RE OVER ANY LAND TARGET. ONCE YOU NOTICE THE COLOR CHANGE, BLAST THEM. THEY'LL THEN RISE TO THE SURFACE, SO IF YOU HAVE TIME, BLAST THEM AGAIN, AND YOU'LL DESTROY THEM. THE XEVIOUS GAME IS PROGRAMMED TO PLAY DIFFERENTLY AGAINST GOOD PLAYERS. THE MACHINE ADAPTS AND ADJUSTS TO YOUR STYLE OF PLAYING, MAKING XEVIOUS A TOUGH CHALLENGE YOU'RE UP AGAINST A SMART MACHINE.

AS YOUR SOLVALOU CROSSES THE LANDSCAPE, YOU'LL ENCOUNTER NEW AND DIFFERENT SIGHTS ALONG THE WAY. THE FURTHER YOU GO, THE MORE YOU'LL SEE, WHICH IS A REWARD OF SORTS FOR A GOOD SCORE. ENEMY SHIPS AND LAND VEHICLES KEEP APPEARING IN NEW AND STRANGER VARIETIES. YOU'LL WANT TO PLAY XEVIOUS A LOT, IF ONLY TO FIND OUT WHAT COMES NEXT. HIGHLIGHTS OF THE JOURNEY INCLUDE A HUGE MOTHERSHIP, A GIANT OUTLINE OF A BIRD DRAWN ON THE PLANET'S SURFACE, AND A STRANGE THROUGHFARE. YOU HAVE TO SEE THIS STUFF TO BELIEVE IT.

WHAT'S NEVER EXPLAINED IS WHY YOU HAVE TO DESTROY THIS BEAUTIFUL PLANET. IT'S A LOT OF FUN, BUT AFTER A WHILE YOU FEEL LIKE THE RUSSIANS IN AFGHANISTAN. WHAT'S SO EVIL ABOUT THE ALIEN CIVILIZATION THAT YOU HAVE TO DESTROY IT ANYWAY? WHY AREN'T THERE ANY PEOPLE ANYWHERE—IS THE PLANET ENTIRELY INHABITED BY MACHINES? IS THIS THE EARTH AFTER THE ROBOTS HAVE TAKEN OVER?

DOESN'T MATTER. THE IDEA IS TO STAY ALIVE. TO DO THAT YOU HAVE TO KILL AND DESTROY. THE MORE THE BETTER. LOOK OUT FOR NUMBER ONE. WHO CARES ABOUT A COUPLE OF HUNDRED ALIENS WHEN YOUR LIFE IS AT STAKE? KILL OR BE KILLED. IT'S THE LAW OF THE UNIVERSE.

CRYPTIC

Illustrated by Bruce Cartman

Dirty Dishes • For years, western anthropologists stood aghast at the spectacle of African tribesmen calmly devouring mouthfuls of earth. Experts have always presumed that the practice arose either out of desperate hunger, or superstition and ignorance. Suddenly, they're not so sure. Upon analyzing the chemical components of the soils and their physiological effects, scientists have unearthed a different scenario. It turns out some varieties of mud contain sufficient quantities of iron to help pregnant women ward off anemia, while other kinds provide enough clay to ease stomach disorders. Before it develops into a full-blown wholistic fad, however, folks closer to home should keep Times Beach and Love Canal in mind, and stick to Alka-Seltzer.

Correxocet • The first anniversary of the Falklands War has streaked by leaving much media debris in its wake, with not a word to explain a crucial factor in the conflict—the success of the Exocet missile. Although British technical and military publications have long since uncovered the real facts, mainstream media remain strangely silent. Here's the story: the fact that British ships also possessed Exocets was apparently the key to their undoing. You see, all the electronic radar gadgetry aboard the H.M.S. Sheffield, Britain's first and greatest Exocet victim, worked perfectly: it detected the Argentine missile's approach—and ignored it! Royal Navy computers had been programmed to get paranoid only at Soviet armaments. As Argentina was a once-friendly country using weapons the Brits themselves owned, the ship-board computers bleeped away cordially at the approach of an old friend instead of triggering powerful alarms. Why the strange conspiracy of media silence? Is everyone afraid of giving the Soviets ideas? Maybe. But to exploit that weakness, the Russians would have to spend millions rearming with western weapons. The real danger is more likely to come from smaller, more belligerent, not-so-aligned nations like Argentina, dumping grounds for western weaponry.

Polly Want a Cruise Missile • Is President Reagan soliciting nuke strategy advice from parrots? Studies published in the journal Animal Behaviour show that parrots practice a deterrence theory of self-defense, much like our President's. For instance, the larger a parrot's bill, the less likely it is to attack a mirror image of itself. Parrots packing such heavy beakpower that the MAD principle (Mutual Assured Destruction) comes into play, prefer long elaborate displays of belligerence to actual fighting. And the barrage of grand gestures tends to be unpredictable and contradictory—like Reagan diplomacy—instead of developing coherently. All those sudden and erratic actions are supposed to deter opponents by showing them this is one psychotic customer they're dealing with. Unfortunately, fights do occur, and a lot of plumage fallout results. Parrots, however, don't have the option of mutually reducing the size of their bills. • Despite the President's mighty zoological erudition, those cranky Europeans persist in their un-American rejection of Pershing IIs and cruise missiles. Why? Do they know something we don't? Could they have heard that the Pershing II has only been successfully fired once? And only over a shorter distance than will be required in actual use? Or have they somehow gotten wind of the fact that the cruise has not been tested to its full necessary distance overseas? (The U.S. you see, doesn't have the space, so negotiations with Canada are under-way to test it up there.) Above all, did they find out that some twenty percent of cruise firings fail? (They either only go a short distance, or the wrong way, or just come straight down.) Meaning: New York might end up destroying Los Angeles instead of Moscow. Now in the States we don't let that kind of info fall into the wrong hands. National security, you know.

We Were Only Following Orders

• It started with a computer that diagnosed diseases better than a doctor. Naturally it's gonna lead to a computer that fights wars better than a general. Just last year a University of Pittsburgh team developed INTERNIST-1, a machine programmed to match symptoms with possible diseases. It consistently came up with a more accurate list of likely afflictions than the MDs did. Pentagon officials intelligent enough to know they're at least as dumb as physicians snapped the idea up. Now they're evolving a computer that's the very model of a modern major-general. It's fed data on the good and bad decisions commanders have made at war games so it can filter out the bad and use the good to anticipate attacks and direct actions on future battlefields. Which means that the next time an innocent village is bombed back to the Stone Age, everyone can blame the computer.

Doggie Style • Narcolepsy—it's a dog's life. Ten years ago doctors discovered that dogs also suffer from the disorder that causes people to unexpectedly fall asleep in the middle of a workday activity. A discovery like this is a researcher's dream, as dogs could now be used as lab specimens for probing and poking. After countless hours of sleep-inducing experimentation, scientists discovered that narcoleptic dogs and humans tended to black out most often during moments of peak pleasure—i.e. during feeding and sex for dogs, parties and sex for humans. So here's the point: those of you whose partners have the annoying habit of getting ever more sleepy and bored-looking as you desperately stimulate them in all the right places... could be you're turning them on so much they've just got to fall asleep.

The City That Didn't Exist

by P. Christin and Enki Bilal

LAST WE READ, MADEMOISELLE HANNARD MET WITH THE OFFICERS OF HANNAUD, INC. AND CONVINCED THEM ALL TO RELINQUISH THEIR CONTROL OF THE COMPANY IN A STATEMENT MADE TO THE TOWNSPEOPLE. THE IDEALISTIC WOMAN ANNOUNCED THAT SHE WAS GOING TO BUILD A NEW TOWN FOR ALL, WHERE EVERYONE WOULD LIVE AND WORK AS EQUALS.

AND SO IT WAS, DURING THAT GRAY AND FOGGY AUTUMN, THAT SOME-WHERE ON THE WATER-LOGGED LAND, A STRANGE YEAR BEGAN.

SITE.

IT'S IDEAL! I KNOW YOU CAN DO GREAT THINGS WITH
THE LAYOUT OF THIS PLACE,
ONCE YOU PUT PEN TO PAPER.

MMM. ONCE YOU MARRY THE OLD WORLD SPLENDOR OF
FLANDERS WITH THE WONDERS
OF MODERN TECHNOLOGY,
THIS WHOLE PLACE WILL BECOME...

AN EXTRAVAGANZA!

YES,
EVENTUALLY PEOPLE WILL TRAVEL FROM ROUND THE
WORLD TO SEE
OUR NEW TOWN.

THE WINTER WAS COLD AND DRY,
UNDER THE PALE SKY, IN THE QUIET
OF THE FROSTED GRASS, THE PEOPLE TOOK POSSESSION OF
THE PEACEFUL COUNTRYSIDE
LITTLE BY LITTLE.

ARE THE ANCHORING POINTS OF THE DOMES STILL POSING ANY PROBLEMS?

NOT AT ALL. MY COUSIN SHALL BE VERY HAPPY.

THE PLASTIC MOUNTING WILL BE DONE IMMEDIATELY.

WHEN SPRING CAME 'ROUND, FULL OF SHEET SMELLS AND THE SONGS OF BIRDS HIDDEN IN THE GREEN GRASS, SOMETHING ENORMOUS BEGAN TO DOMINATE THE SURROUNDING PASTURE.

DURING THE SUMMER THERE WERE QUICKLY FORGOTTEN STORMS. IN THE AIR, VIBRANT WITH HEAT AND OFTEN STREAKED WITH DRY LIGHTNING, THE CITY TOOK, BIT BY BIT, A DEFINITIVE FORM.

I HAVE HERE THE PLANS FOR THE PEDESTRIAN WALKWAYS, AND FOR THE PLACING OF THE MARKETS.

WE HAVE FINISHED OUR RESEARCH AND THE ASSEMBLY LINE HAS BEGUN TO WORK ON THE FURNITURE.

HAPPY?

THERE ARE STILL SOME DETAILS THAT ARE AMISS. I WANT THIS CITY TO BE PERFECT. NOT A STONE SHOULD BE CRACKED. I HOPE EVERYTHING WILL BE FINE WHEN PRODUCTION IS THROUGH.

AND FINALLY, ON A SUNDAY
MARKED BY FREQUENT
DOWNPOURS OF RAIN AND
AN ODD BURST OF SUN-
LIGHT HERE AND THERE,
THE OLD JACENICOURT
WAS NO MORE.

AND SO THE CELEBRATION BEGAN. THE NEW CITY WAS PERFECT. IT SHELTERED ITS INHABITANTS FROM THE ELEMENTS, FROM OTHER MEN, AND THEIR CRIES, FROM OTHER CITIES AND THEIR CRIME AND POLLUTION.

TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT ISSUE...

AN OLD FART AT PLAY:

CONVERSATIONS WITH CAPTAIN BEEFHEART

Illustration by Brian McCall

There's no doubt in my mind that Don Van Vliet (better known by his nom de disc, Captain Beefheart) is one of the most extraordinary humans on the face of the Earth. A few years ago, in a youthfully effusive frenzy, I called him an ubermensch (superman, for you non-Nietzscheans), something he's never let me live down. But the man isn't so much a superman, as...well, a separate genus and species of humanity all his own.

That's utter dogshit, of course—the man's body has the same creaks and groans, and produces the same stinky waste products as the rest of us stuck here on God's golf ball. But it's trying to figure out the workings of his mind—the wildest bouncing day-glo colored ball of vaseline you've ever chased—that gets you into trouble groping for metaphors beyond the linguistic fringe. Like all great creative anomalies, he's hewn his own universe from the meat of our cast-offs, and deposited himself at its center; a passionate, curious, intensely sensitive, cranky, and hilariously funny child who refuses to "grow up," and probably couldn't, even if he wanted to. He's an artist because his mind won't allow his body to sit still; his chosen mediums are oil on canvas, marker on sketch pad, words on paper, and vibrating air molecules on ear drum. His music is an exhilarating, euphonious cacophony, composed either on piano or whistled/hummed/scat-sung into a tape recorder to be meticulously transposed according to his exacting specifications by his band (including at the moment: Gary Lucas, guitar and management; Jeff Topper, guitar; Richard Snyder, bass; Eric Feldman, keyboards; Cliff Martinez, drums).

The sounds made by the Magic Band ring in your head like no other music you've ever heard. Audacious, unheard-of harmonies day and shimmer in the light, and leave strange, exotic tastes in your mouth. Swamp-motor rhythms both support and subvert the foundations of listener expectations—every time you reach out to lean on one, it's suddenly no longer there. It is an assaulting, cataclysmically intense, vastly entertaining, and fucking humbling body of work—one that I'm convinced will one day be regarded as a high point of our age.

Van Vliet was born in Glendale, California in 1941. His first album, a night's worth of steamy, psychedelic blues, was recorded in 1965, but not released until 1970 as Mirror Man. Since then, vinyl highlights of a career that's taken more ups and downs than Richard Nixon's include: Strictly Personal (1968; one of the essential documents of the psychedelic age), Trout Mask Replica (1969; a monument of deviant creativity), Lick My Decals Off, Baby (1970; a sort of twisted, Beefheartian pop album), The Spangled Kid (1972; a sort of twisted, Beefheartian blues album), Shiny Beast (Bat Chain Puller) (1978; Don in a mellow mood), Doc At The Radar Station (1980; my choice for the one album I want to be buried with), and Ice Cream for Crow (last year's reaffirmation of Van Vliet's vitality).

These days Don lives in a trailer in the middle of the Mohave desert with his wife, Jan. He is busily preparing for a major New York gallery show of his paintings, planned for sometime in the fall. In his spare time he has written about eighty songs for the next Captain Beefheart and his Magic Band LP, scheduled for recording in the late fall, probably for a Christmas release. He recently turned down an offer to produce Laurie Ann derson's next album in order to concentrate on his painting. (That olympian clashing of sensibilities could've produced something interesting, to say the least.) This interview was conducted during one of Don's infrequent visits to New York, when by all accounts he is at his worst: terminally wired, sleepless, paranoid, overloaded with sensory input, and painfully sensitized to everything around him. It was one of the most difficult interviews I've ever done, and one of the best times I've ever had. You had to be there.

—Lou Stathis

A Useful Member of Society

HM: You once said that not going to school enabled you to remain a child.

DVV: Yeah, I still feel like a child—every day, everything is exciting and brand new to me.

HM: You think school removes the child from all of us?

DVV: Yeah, I think so. Why do they do that?

HM: To make you a more useful member of society.

DVV: Well, I'm certainly not useful. I'm quite natural, and that's why they don't want to use me. I don't want them to.

HM: It would be economically disastrous to have 200 million people like you in this country—lots of fun, though. How extraordinary do you think you are?

DVV: I don't—not at all.

HM: Do you think you're different from most people?

DVV: No, I don't think so. Well...I do what I want, and most people don't. So in that way I guess I'm definitely different, cause I do what I want.

HM: And that's all that sets you apart? You don't think you're gifted in any special way?

DVV: I'm smart as hell—I know that—and I don't have that many roadmaps on my head. People have roadmaps—I didn't want 'em, I didn't take 'em.

HM: And that was a conscious effort?

DVV: I fought it—totally. I may get hardening of the arteries, but never hardening of the eyes. I'm stubborn, real stubborn.

HM: How long can you hold out?

DVV: All along. Why not?

HM: And why haven't others done what they wanted to do?

DVV: They're lazy. I work all the time. I haven't taken a vacation in my life. I'm working—writing, painting, and doing music all the time, day and night. I've seen the sun and the moon almost every day of my life. I make it a habit to see both of them. I want to see all of it, if I can.

HM: What do you think your art does for people?

DVV: I think it makes them breathe. I mean, I'm not so sure they should pay too close attention—I wouldn't want them to get hurt.

HM: Why not? It'd probably do them some good.

DVV: Probably. It's never hurt me.

'He [Photographer Anton Corbijn] and I were in L.A., at the La Brea Tar Pits. We were sitting in the car, and I said, 'I'll take you to the right place—the light place.' We drove out into the desert, and we had fifteen minutes of just the right light. I said, 'I'm a piece of meat, Anton. You just put me where you want me.' He just kept saying, 'I don't need to do that, this is fine.' And he told me to take my hat off for a moment, so I took my hat off, and he said, 'That's fine.' It was all done in fifteen minutes. I knew then that these would be the best [pictures] I'd ever seen.'

HM: How does it feel to be one of the last remaining members of the avant-garde?

DVV: I don't think there ever was any. Do you?

HM: Yeah. I think so—there's always been a group of people doing something totally different, working outside existing parameters and ignoring everyone else.

DVV: What group?

HM: You know—various art movements in the past: Dada, shit like that.

DVV: (wistfully) Oh yeah, wasn't that nice. All those painters . . .

HM: Well, all that seems to have disappeared. Do you think there's any room left for the avant-garde?

DVV: There better be room for those of us doing exactly what we want, cause that's what I'm going to do anyway. It's like in the record industry—they're totally desperate. The only way they're going to get out of their hole is to start paying attention to real artists.

HM: Drowning people rarely reach for what will save them—they'll grab anything they can.

DVV: Well, they won't get a hold of me. They'll get sucked in with me.

HM: That's optimistic. I think. They don't really hear anything unless it comes through their bank accounts.

DVV: Then I'll influence them through their dollar bills (makes dumb bird gestures). I'll tell you what. I ain't going nowhere. I mean, I'm going to stay here and do what I damn well please. I'll never not do what I damn please. There's no way I'll ever do anything I don't want to do.

HM: Do you feel at all like a dinosaur? A last member of a dying breed?

DVV: I feel like everyone else's been asleep. All along. And they'd better wake up.

HM: What's this shit about your never wanting to tour again. Is that true?

DVV: (grimaces painfully)

HM: Have you had it?

DVV: I'd've always had it. It was only a few people I played to, anyway. I mean, all the time that I was playing, there were only a few people—small pockets of people really listening.

HM: It isn't worth doing for the number of people you can reach?

DVV: I can't afford it. And it takes up too much time. I'd much rather stay home and work. I've got too much to do.

HM: But the thought of never seeing you and the band live again is painful to me.

DVV: Me, too, in a way. But I'm getting too selfish—I'll still see the band. We'll still make records—I've got more compositions to record now than I've ever had before. And this band—there's no end to the things I can do with them. They want to do everything.

HM: C'mon, tell me the truth—will you really never play another concert again? I'd even fly to L.A. to see you.

DVV: You would? Then we'll put on a concert for you.

HM: Talk about small pockets of people! If you're playing in a hall that seats two thousand, or so, what percentage of them do you think are awake? Five percent? Ten percent?

DVV: (laughs) I don't know; I never think of it that way. I hate lower mathematics.

Painting In the Dark

DVV: (cringing Dracula-like from the light) I'm photophobic. Light just puts my eyes out.

HM: Don't you go out in the daytime?

DVV: Of course not! For me to do that is really unusual. They're (pointing at eyes) really getting a treat when I do that.

HM: Don't you need light when you paint?

DVV: No, I know what I want on the canvas anyway.

HM: So it's more head-to-hand than eye-to-head-to-hand.

DVV: Sure, but the eye does have something to do with it. I'm trying to get my head-to-hand in shape, though, like Van Gogh. It's ridiculous, but I'll do it. Who's gonna tell me I won't? Me, and I'm not going to tell me I won't. I can do it with music, so I can do it with paint.

HM: How many paintings and drawings do you have stashed away that no one's seen?

DVV: Thousands. That shade on the Ice Cream for Crow cover (painting used for album cover painted on window shade) was done during Trout Mask. My wife brought it out—I had done it during a rehearsal. She had it in her purse—she was saving the thing. Pulled it out one day and said, "Maybe you can use this."

HM: How are you preparing for your gallery show?

DVV: I'm painting like crazy—really painting. I mean, put me in front of an empty white square and I go nuts. And I'm doing these really big paintings—ten feet by ten feet, seven feet square . . .

HM: Are you working in the trailer?

DVV: No, I'm working out front.

HM: At night?

DVV: Yeah. I put up lights, but sometimes I walk away and paint in the dark. Sometimes, it's just a feeling, and you really don't need to see what you're doing—what am I saying? Of course you do. But I like to feel the damn paint, and the canvas with its big teeth. I feel like I'm being attacked by a big cloth werewolf. I mean, the feel of the softness and thickness of the paint with the brush—it's almost like fur.

Not Hot Enough

DVV: I'm moving to Arizona.

HM: Why the hell are you doing that?

DVV: It's hotter—it's not hot enough in Lancaster.

HM: You like the heat?

DVV: Yeah, as long as I have a swamp cooler—

HM: A fan and a pan of water?

DVV: —yeah. (Laughs.) Then I can see the heat. I love that. I want it as hot as it can get. I like the extremes, and the extremes in Arizona are fantastic: Winter is really cold—there's snow—and the heat is real hot. Extremes are kind of pleasant to me.

HM: That would drive me crazy—it bothers me about N.Y.C.

DVV: Yeah, but you enjoy it. That's why you're here—you enjoy going crazy.

HM: I enjoy the result, but not the process. Doesn't it make you at all physically uncomfortable?

DVV: Nah. I had asthma as an infant, so I need plenty of space to breathe.

HM: How the hell can you breathe at all when it's so damn hot?

DVV: Well, you have to really try.

HM: And that's good?

DVV: I think so. That way you can't relax—I'd hate that. Then you'd get laaaiidd baaack (burlesques total muscle relaxation). Yecch, I hate that, y'know, "Hey man, I'm laid back." Like the music—fly spray music. Yeah, I wouldn't mind leaving L.A. at all.

HM: What sort of environment will you set up for yourself in Arizona?

DVV: I'd like it to be near Tempe, but way out in the desert. I'll have a house, and a studio to paint in.

HM: Have you found a place that you want?

DVV: No, I'm going to build it.

HM: With your own little hands?

DVV: Yeah. (Laughs hysterically.) My own little hands.

To Whom It May Concern:

I don't care what anyone says, HM remains unique among the graphic publications available today. Those who feel that your magazine's quality is declining are, I suspect, suffering from a syndrome comparable to that experienced by long-term heroin addicts. The first few jolts are terrific, but after a while the body's metabolism adjusts to the drug, and the high is no longer a "special" experience, but merely a common, everyday occurrence, like breathing. In other words, your readers have become jaded by too much of a good thing! I don't believe your quality is declining—if anything I've noticed a general improvement over the years. Your early issues placed a heavy (oops!) emphasis on graphic tour de force, often at the expense of a coherent story line. Crepax's "The Man From Harlem" represents a recent case in point, with its tight plot, and cogent characterizations. I found the artist's earlier "Valentina" series visually exciting, but conceptually vague.

Frank Thring's letter (Chain Mail, Feb. '83) has gotten my dander up, because it sums up the pathological bent of many of your critics. Mr. Thring eschews mass culture (whatever that is) and "reflections of contemporary reality," preferring, I suppose, a return to the Hyperborean Age. Since HM can be obtained at nearly any drugstore, it must be seen as representative of "mass culture" and as a "reflection of contemporary reality." Ergo, to Mr. Thring's mode of thinking, HM's quality has declined because it no longer appears to cater to an intellectual elite willing to search out copies in esoteric basement shops cluttered with fanzines and back issues of Machine Man. I hate to disillusion Mr. Thring—particularly since he seems to set great store by being in a state of illusion—but since neither graphic art (néé "comix") nor sf/fantasy writing were around during the pre-industrial age, all efforts in those mediums are "reflections of contemporary reality"—as is the fact that you have to sell your magazines to a wide audience in order to continue to produce them. In fact, Mr. Thring's own yearnings to escape "contemporary reality" are, in and of themselves, a reflection of the same.

Sorry to go on like that. I guess I really took issue with Thring's attack on Kierkegaard's "Rock Opera," which I've been following since it was a feature in D.C.'s own Uncolored Times. It's invariably the first thing I turn to when I buy a new issue of HM. Long may it run!

W. Luther Jett
Point of Rocks, MD

Dear Metaloids:

As one who is interested in the bizarre and surreal aspects of the human imagination, I am, of course, drawn to your magazine. I await new issues eagerly, and I'm rarely disappointed. The illustrated work is always at least interesting, and Mr. Stathis's musical tastes are the best in any American publication. My only problem is that it takes me about an hour to knock off a typical issue. Then it's another month's wait for the next installment. This is why I strongly urge you to expand the prose within your pages. I don't consider HM "merely a comic book," and I feel its potential to be something truly unique should be exercised. I'd like to see more extended interviews with rock musicians, filmmakers, and sf writers. I know the prose vs. comix debate has been plaguing you for quite a while . . . please consider. (We have and we are. We hope to make extended interviews a regular HM feature, spotlighting unique creative talents from every part of the HM spectrum.—ls)

As to the great "Rock Opera" controversy, I think Rod Kierkegaard is the most perceptive contemporary comic/satirist since the Firesign Theater. Lose him and you lose me.

Ulysses Leviticus
Morgan Hill, CA

To Lou Stathis:

With the February '83 issue of HM you managed to bring your rag to a new low. For four years I've watched you slice, dice, and fry records that deserved more (a lot more) of a chance than you gave them. Your listing of "Some (Records) I Couldn't Bear To Listen To . . ." shows that not only are you unjustly prejudiced but proud of it! It seems to me HM's entire readership would be better off if you reviewed Mousercize or the Richard Simmons album (Look for them next month.—ls), and let music stand as it is: music for the pure fun of it! Please don't try to explain everything, life gets so dull that way.

Andy Herd
Ft. Worth, TX

Do I dare make the world a duller place for a moment or two more? As to that list: every one of us has prejudices. To deny that is self-deluding, and in the case of a critic, pernicious. That list was my—admittedly smartass—way of honestly presenting my prejudices (which is more than you get from most critics). I'm not proud of them; just aware. As to the greater Cosmic value of writing about music: sure it's mostly pointless jacking-off, but if I can offer some unique insight into the process or the product (and I think I do), then it's worth it. It's also my job to make it interesting enough for you to want to read it. And I think there's much more to music than just the fun of it.—ls

Dear Julie, John, Lou, etc.:

I've noticed recently a lot of comments in Chain Mail along the lines of: "Stop printing boring crap like Bilal and give us stories we can understand." Well, I'm finding such letters a bit alarming. The stories people should be acclaiming are the very ones they're putting down—Bilal's "The Immortals' Fete," "Progress," and "The Voyage of Those Forgotten," Moebius & Jodorowsky's "The Incal Light," Drulillet's "Yragael," and so on. I'm beginning to get the impression your average reader has an I.Q. of five, and a tremendous fear of being forced to think. Don't ever let those who want HM to be nothing but pseudo-humorous pornography and gore, in order to satisfy their needs for adolescent fantasies, take over completely! Otherwise each month we'd have nothing but Macedo ("Jungle Rock") and Fernandez ("Zora"), which while having pretty colors and big tits, have about the depth of a creek on Tatoine in summer! Comics are an artform, so as the English Speaking World's Major Alternative, (Gulp!—ls) don't abandon the artists and writers who are really trying. As Jean Giraud (Moebius) said: "An adult comic takes the whole concentration of the creator. One can see it as artistic expression, with all that goes with it . . . As for the comic for adults, well I think that this is a synonym for demagogy." I suggest y'all read "Rock Opera," April 1982.

Dylan Horrocks & Tim Raby
Auckland, New Zealand
P.S. Congratulations to Mike Hinge (Who's an ex-Enzer.—ls) for his September 1982 publication in HM.

Dear Lou:

Oh my God, they're at it again. "Comics are terrible, moan, moan." Shit, I've been hearing that stuff for years, and for the most part, it's been: "Comics are terrible, nod, nod." Very rarely has it been, "Boy these comics are crap, let's do something about them."

Let's be honest, the American comic book is at its roots escapist literature for the young, at which it succeeds quite well. They are not Herman Melville, or Elizabeth Barrett Browning, or Hunter Thompson, or Philip K. Dick, they are the comics—with their own inbuilt strengths and limitations. Other countries' comics, to our adult eyes, may seem better, but I've seen the material you've printed and stuff you haven't, and frankly the French have produced a lot of clunkers, too. (Personally, I love and enjoy Japanese Anime comics. I can't read them, however they are visually wonderful and I can understand them.) Also, I'd like to say that some of the people complaining about the problems in comics are in part responsible for those problems—they help/held keep the stereotypes going. And if they look, they'll find books well drawn, not "flashy," and comics well written, not clumsy or steeped in Sturm und Drang. And finally, about the crap in comics, I simply respond the way Ted Sturgeon responded to the fan who claimed 90% of all science fiction was crap. "Well, 90% of everything is crap."

That is the leading edge of response to our March 1983 "What's Wrong with Comics" symposium. Lots more next month.—ls

IS THERE NO JUSTICE IN THE UNIVERSE?

Universe.

Hey,
help!
help!

HEARING THE PLEAS, LÜTTII TRANSFORMS...

Upon Lûttii's transformation to the Grand Arêna a ferocious mass with a hundred green legs, tusks and a slimy digestive unit ATTACKS! A Monster be a match for a God? Let's hope not! The crowd roars its approval! Lûttii is bewildered... "Do they Love me or the gore?"

This is a cruel and evil
World. Pain and suffering are games; Life and Death a sport to pay admission to!

Oh, Great Lûttii don't be so hasty.....if we'd known a God cared.....please just meet some of the good.....

When did you first know this was such an evil planet?

Is there a Mrs. backhome?

No, no I'm the one who got saved!?

Determined to Purify this insensitive world Lüttii agrees to give an interview to the Media. He accepts a daily slot as a guest host on 'Video-Tel Today' and a Column in the afternoon 'ARENA TIMES'. Oooh yeah, the Entémöö...well, you know, there are sacrifices. But who's worried; I mean, statistically, we have to keep a grasp of the bigger picture.

He's just a born Entertainer.

Gee, Dad didn't ya like it when the God got real angry...

But, dad why didn't Lüttii just put the monster to sleep?

After all, Lüttii is very popular now and that's all that really matters.

"A LOT OF PEOPLE FELT MORE SECURE WHEN WE WERE TOLD THAT DAISEY WALTER WAS BEHIND THE INTERNATIONAL MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX..."

FLOWING WITH THE WATERS OF THE RIVER OF OCEAN, OUR SHIP RETURNED TO THE ISLAND OF AEAEA.

CIRCE WELCOMED US WITH BREAD, MEAT, AND WINE THE COLOR OF FIRE.

HAVE YOU THOUGHT, ODYSSEUS, THAT BECAUSE YOU WENT DOWN TO HADES, YOU WILL DIE TWICE, ALTHOUGH OTHER MEN DIE ONLY ONCE?

YOUR SUFFERING IS NOT YET OVER ALONG YOUR JOURNEY. SPYING ON YOU ARE THE SIRENS AND THE WANDERING ROCKS, SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS AND THE ISLAND OF THORINACE AND, SO MANY OTHER DANGERS!

LISTEN TO MY WARNINGS, FOR EVEN IF YOU SAVE YOURSELF...

OF THE CRASHING WAVES OF THE WANDER-ING ROCKS... MY MEN WERE GRIPPED WITH FEAR!

IT WAS TIME TO RETURN TO MY COMMAND.

ONLY I KNEW WHAT THREATENED US IN THE CHANNEL...

ONLY I KNEW WHAT WATCHED US FROM THE DARK WALLS...

CIRCE WARNED ME THAT IT WOULD BE USELESS TO ARM MYSELF AGAINST IMMORTALS, BUT I HELD MY WEAPONS.

WHY NOT STAND UP TO AN IMMORTAL?

I CLIMBED TO THE SHIP'S FOREDECK, PREPARED TO FIGHT FOR MYSELF AND MY COMRADES.

I WAITED AND WAITED,
WATCHING INTENTLY,
BUT THE DANGER
DIDN'T APPEAR...

...AND MY EYES TIRED
FROM THE STRAIN OF
THE DARK GROTTO.

MY ATTENTION WAS CAUGHT BY CHARYBDIS, WHO
SUCKED DOWN THE WATERS WITH A TERRIBLE
ROAR, AND I FELT THE SAME ANGUISH AS THE OTHERS.

IF SHE ENSNARED US, WE WOULD BE DESTROYED!

PEREZ NAVARRO - MARTIN SAUPE

INSIGNIFICANT SMALL FISH.

SHE, THE PERISHABLE PLAGUE,
TERRIBLE AND CRUEL...

SHE, THE IMMORTAL
SCILLA!

CIRCE WAS RIGHT... NOTHING COULD BE DONE!

OF EVERYTHING I HAD SUFFERED IN OUR JOURNEYS, I HAD NEVER LAID EYES ON SUCH HORROR! WE WERE CURSED!

AT LEAST THE AIR CONDITIONER WORKS. I HAVE TO MAKE SURE THAT ALL OF THE WINDOWS AND DOORS ARE KEPT LOCKED, SO THAT NOT A DRIplet OF HOT AIR CAN FILTER THROUGH... NOT A DROP... NOT A THREAD... NOT A PINCH.

...WHAT A DRY... SUCH A DAY...

YEAH, BUT THAT DAMNED AMOEBA-FACE IS GOING TO DRIVE ME CRAZY!!

ONE SECOND! I HAVE TO TAKE OUT THE SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETER.

BECAUSE, FRANKLY, WHAT THE HELL BETTER DO I HAVE TO DO WITH MY TIMER SO THE LITTLE GUY IS IN LOVE WITH MY AIR CONDITIONER! BIG DEAL!

I DIDN'T KNOW YOU CARED SO MUCH.

I'LL SEE YOU, MIKE!

HOLY... STOP IT!

STOP CRYING... MY GOD, THE AIR CONDITIONER IS BROKEN.

HE'S GONE! NOT EVEN THE MAYTAG REPAIRMAN COULD SAVE HIM NOW.

ZORA

SO FAR, AMON CONTINUES TO RECOVER FROM HIS WOUNDS UNDER THE WATCHFUL, MECHANICAL EYE OF THE AUTO-MEDIC. ZORA, MEANWHILE, IS OVERTAKEN BY A REVERIE OF FORGOTTEN MEMORIES... WHEN, DURING A PATROL, HER SHIP WANDERED INTO A SWARM OF METEORS. MOMENTS BEFORE IMPACT, ALL MOVEMENT AROUND HER SLOWED TO A NEAR-HALT, WHILE SHE HERSELF WAS UNAFFECTED. DOWNING HER SPACE SUIT, SHE WENT OUT FOR A STROLL.

Demetrius

IT WAS SOMETHING STRANGE AND UNIMAGINABLE. IT APPEARED TO BE SLIPPERY WITH SMOOTH, UNDULATING FOLDS OF FLESH PULSATING IN THE VACUUM LIKE A LIVING, PROTOPLASMIC ORGAN. AN OPENING SUDDENLY APPEARED IN ITS SURFACE, AND THE BUBBLE ENFOLDING ZORA WAS ENSULFED...

...WHILE SHE SLOWLY BEGAN TO REGAIN HER SENSES AND TRIED TO FIGURE OUT WHAT WAS HAPPENING TO HER.

THOSE LIGHTS THAT SURROUNDED ME... THEN THE TRIP THROUGH SPACE FROM AN SHIP TO THIS STRANGE THING.

IT LOOKS ALIVE... IT'S THROBBING, BUT... NO, IT CAN'T BE - IT MUST BE A MECHANICAL OBJECT, SOMETHING CONSTRUCTED BY SOME ALIEN TECHNOLOGY.

BUT WHO IS IN CONTROL? AND WHAT ARE THEY AFTER?

FEELING LIKE A GUINEA PIG IN A CAGE, ZORA WAITED FOR SOME KIND OF SIGN.

SHE DON'T HAVE TO WAIT FOR VERY LONG. THINGS SUDDENLY BEGAN TO MOVE ALL AROUND HER.

BY THE QUEEN BEE! WHAT ARE THESE TENTACLES DOING TO ME? THEY'RE STICKING TO MY SKIN! BUT THEY DON'T HURT.

MY ANXIETY SEEMS TO BE DISAPPEARING—THEY MUST BE INJECTING TRANQUILIZERS INTO MY SYSTEM. MAYBE THEY WERE WORRIED ABOUT SCARING ME TO DEATH.

HEY! WHOEVER'S IN CHARGE HERE—LISTEN TO ME! I'M NO MORE SCARED THAN YOU'D BE IF YOU WERE IN MY SHOES. JUST COME OUT WHERE I CAN SEE YOU AND TELL ME WHAT YOU WANT!

MAYBE I SHOULD BE MORE POWERFUL—EVEN CURSE A LITTLE BIT. I COULD FIRE A WARNING SHOT.

HUH? HOW DO YOU KNOW MY NAME, RANK, AND LANGUAGE?

I KNOW EVERYTHING THAT'S STORED IN YOUR BRAIN...

OH, YEAH?

YOU CARBON-CHAIN BEINGS IN THE SECOND EVOLUTIONARY STAGE HAVE INTELLECTS THAT ARE QUITE ELEMENTARY...

DON'T BE A FOOL AND GIVE IN TO YOUR PRIMITIVE INSTINCTS, CAPTAIN ZORA.

HOW DO YOU SEE YOURSELF AND WHAT YOU REMEMBER OF YOUR PAST.

THAT'S CORRECT. I HAVE ACCESS TO YOUR ENTIRE MIND—CONSCIOUS, UNCONSCIOUS, AND MEMORY.

...AND YOU HAVE THE TENDENCY TO OVER-RATE YOURSELVES.

YOU'RE READING MY MIND!

OKAY, MASTER. SO I'M A MEMBER OF SOME PATHETIC, INFERIOR SPECIES. I STILL WANT TO KNOW WHO YOU ARE AND WHAT YOU'RE UP TO.

YOUR IGNORANCE IS SO PROFOUND THAT YOUR ENTIRE LIFE-SPAN WOULD NOT GIVE ME ENOUGH TIME TO EXPLAIN THE ESSENCE THAT GIVES ME LIFE...

... BUT I WILL ATTEMPT TO DESCRIBE SOME OF IT FOR YOU- ADJUSTING, OF COURSE, FOR YOUR MISERABLY LOW LEVEL OF UNDERSTANDING.

I DETECTED A PROTECTIVE FORCE FLOWING TOWARD YOU FROM ANOTHER PART OF THE GALAXY. IT WAS THAT FORCE THAT SAVED YOU FROM DYING IN YOUR SHIP...

BY CONCENTRATING YOUR TIME MATRIX IN RELATION TO THE OTHERS, BUT YOU WERE STILL IN DANGER, SO FOLLOWING THE CODE OF INUS, I RESCUED YOU.

THE PROTECTIVE FORCE WAS ASSIGNED YOU A CRUCIAL ROLE IN THE FUTURE SURVIVAL OF YOUR SPECIES. TOGETHER WITH A REPRODUCTIVE PARTNER THEY ARE GUIDING TOWARDS YOU. I WILL SHOW THIS MAN TO YOU, SINCE EVERYTHING YOU SEE HERE WILL ONLY REGISTER IN YOUR SUBCONSCIOUS, AND BE INSTANTLY FORGOTTEN.

YOU'RE CRAZY! THESE THINGS YOU ARE SHOWING ME ARE NAUSEATING! IT'S A LIE! YOU'RE TRYING TO CONFUSE ME!

I KNEW YOU WOULDN'T UNDERSTAND THAT YOUR DESTINY IS PREDETERMINED ON ANOTHER SPIRITUAL/TEMPORAL PLANE...

...AND FURTHERMORE, CONVINCING YOU OF THIS IS NO JOB FOR A SEMI-BIOLOGICAL PROBE FROM THE EPTAL STRATUM OF INUS. I WILL SEND YOU OUT TO MEET A SISTERHOOD SHIP THAT'S COMING TO GET YOU...

...AND RETURN TO MY PRIMARY TASK OF OBSERVING THIS GALACTIC ARMY. I NOW RELINQUISH YOU TO YOUR DESTINY.

LOOOOP

WHAT A BLOODY STRAIN IT WAS TO LOWER MYSELF TO SUCH A MINISCULE MENTAL LEVEL, AND TO THINK THIS WHOLE UNIVERSE IS CRAWLING WITH THEM!

ZUULUSS

JUST AS SMOOTHLY AS SHE'D BEEN RESCUED, ZORA IS EJECTED BY THE HUGE ORGANISM AND DEPOSITED AT A DISTANCE CALCULATED TO INSURE HER DETECTION BY THE HONEYCOMB'S PATROL.

ZORA, DEPRESSED AND IMPOTENT, IS AT A LOSS TO UNDERSTAND THIS "PREFABRICATED DESTINY" THAT UNKNOWN FORCES HAVE OBLIGED HER TO FULFILL. SHE FEELS LIKE A PAWN IN SOME CRUEL COSMIC GAME.

THE AUTO-MEDIC TECHNICIANS CAN'T GUARANTEE AMON'S SURVIVAL.

THE TRANSFUSION OF ROBE'S BLOOD JUST MANAGED TO MOMENTARILY STABILIZE HIM.

THEY'RE AFRAID HIS CONDITION WILL DEGRADATE, AND HE'LL DIE.

WHAT SHOULD WE DO?

IN CASES AS CRITICAL AS THIS, THE ONLY ALTERNATIVE IS HIBERNATION.

NO! I COULDN'T STAND THAT!

YOU MUST UNDERSTAND ZORA—WE HAVE TO MAKE A QUICK DECISION. IT WILL TAKE SEVERAL HOURS TO PREPARE HIM FOR HIBERNATION.

AND WE CAN'T BE SURE THE HONEY-COMB WILL STILL BE HERE TOMORROW. YOU AND AMON WILL BE TAKEN ABOARD A TRANSPORT SHIP AND FERRIED TO THE GENESIS II. SO IF SHARTA DESTROYS THE SATELLITE, YOU TWO AT LEAST WILL BE SAFE.

ANLEA, AN URGENT MESSAGE FOR YOU FROM CAPTAIN TURA!

PROCEED WITH THE EVACUATION PLAN, ANLEA. SHARTA'S GIVEN US AN ULTIMATUM. SHE'S THREATENING TO BLOW THE REACTORS IN THE PALACE OF ENERGY IF WE DON'T SURRENDER.

I HOPE WE'LL BE ABLE TO STOP HER—OR AT LEAST STALL FOR A LITTLE TIME.

VERY GOOD, TURA. WE'LL START MOVING OUT. GOOD LUCK!

SOON, THE HIBERNATION CHAMBER, WITH AMON INSIDE, IS PLACED IN THE TRANSPORT SHIP. BRONCO SUPERVISES THE LOADING.

MAKE SURE AND GET THIS SHUFF IN FIRST, BRONCO— THERE ARE HELMETS, AIR FILTERS, AND OTHER LIFE SUPPORT GEAR.

ROGER, NYLEA.

AND, AS HE ENTERED THE SHIP...

BRONCO'S DEATH DISMAYS HIS FRIENDS, BUT THEY BEAR UP AND DEVOTE THEIR ATTENTION TO THEIR ALL-IMPORTANT MISSION.

WE'LL DO IT TOGETHER, NYLEA.

WE MUST BURY BRONCO NEAR WHERE HE WAS BORN, LIKE HE WANTED HE WAS A GOOD, DECENT MAN.

NO, ZORA. YOUR FUTURE'S ALL SET FOR YOU. YOU STILL HAVE HOPE, BECAUSE YOU ARE OUR HOPE. ALL I WANT IS REVENGE! HONOR MY DECISION AND LEAVE ME WITH HIM.

IT TOOK ME SO LONG TO FIND TRUTH AND LOVE... I HATE THIS DAMNED WORLD OF INTOLERANCE AND HATE! WE MUST DESTROY THE VERY SEEDS OF THIS FANATICISM. FAREWELL, MY FRIENDS.

WE SHOULD SAVE NYLEA, EVEN IF SHE DOESN'T WISH TO BE SAVED.

NO, ROB. THIS IS WHAT SHE WANTS. IT'S HER OWN KIND OF SALVATION.

THE WATCH IS OPEN. TURA KEPT HER PROMISE.

OUR PATH IS CLEAR TO THE GENESIS II— AND WE CAN HELP THEM BY FIRING FROM ABOVE.

FOR A SECOND, THE IMAGE OF HER BELOVED BRONCO GLEAMS IN NYLEA'S EYES, BUT THEN THE GLEAM HARDENS INTO STEEL... BATTLE AWAITS HER.

IN THE PALACE OF ENERGY, SHARTA AND HER TROOPS FIGHT DESPERATELY. FROM HER COMMAND POST SHE CONTROLS THE REACTORS, THE UNLEASHED POWER OF WHICH CAN DESTROY THEM ALL.

TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT ISSUE...

Beautiful binders

For just $5.50 you get our old standby—a white vinyl binder with a picture of a naked girl and a ghoulish monster. Or, our new, more sophisticated black "Nau-ghyde" binder with silver letters, for just $5.95. Each can be obtained chock full of back issues (January through December, of 1978, 1979, 1980, and 1982, are $26.00 each), or empty, which doubles real nicely as a Sunday dress-up hat!

Who would have imagined, when our mammoth Star Force overran the tiny planet of the "Nehi," that our invasion would turn out to be the biggest disaster in military history? And that Marty and I (for rather embarrassing reasons) would be the only survivors...?

Come on, Marty-- hurry up!

If we don't make it to the mother ship in 15 minutes, they'll leave without us!

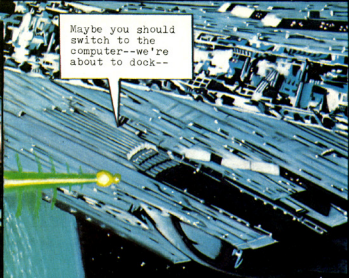

Hey, no sweat-- we'll just push these little buttons and take off--

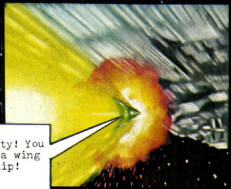

See, nothing to it--
Let's take this baby out for a spin.

Maybe you should switch to the computer--we're about to dock--

Jesus, Marty! You
just took a wing
off the ship!

Gimme that joystick--
we're going to back in!

No, Marty! NO!

It's really your fault for being my friend in the first place!

Besides, those things always looked so easy to drive in Star Wars...

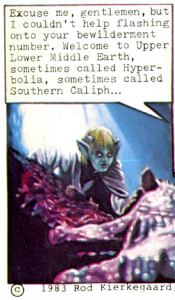

Hey, look! A cute little dragon!

OW OW OW!
The bastard burned me!

Maybe we could sell them as novelty cigarette lighters, huh?

Excuse me, gentlemen, but I couldn't help flashing onto your bewildering number. Welcome to Upper Lower Middle Earth, sometimes called Hyperbolia, sometimes called Southern Caliph...

We get the picture. Who the hell are you?

Me? Why I'm a fairy, of course. Silly.
